1. The draft law “On Preventing and Striking at Organized Crime” constitutes one of the priority and important initiatives of the Council of Ministers in the framework of the continuation and intensification of legislative and institutional measures for effectively striking at and preventing organized crime.

This initiative is part of and fulfils an important element of the package of legislative measures contemplated in the program of the government for 2004. In addition to this draft law, a number of measures are also included in this package of reforms connected with criminal reform, the amendment and completion of the Criminal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure, according to the standards, requirements and models contemplated in international law, including the Palermo Convention, as well as the successful experiences of the countries of Western Europe in the treatment and meeting of the problem areas of organized crime and the phenomena that accompany and nourish it.

2. The forms of organized crime constitute a threat and a principal hindrance for normality and the consolidation of the functioning of democratic institutions and the state of law and the market economy in Albania.

In addition, organized crime relies on, nourishes or encourages other phenomena, such as terrorism, trafficking, money laundering and corruption. At the same time, this phenomenon threatens and creates insecurity with local and foreign investors, as well as affecting the level of credibility and of respect for the law and institutions by the citizens.

In order to prevent and fight these phenomena, concrete and systematic legal measures and policies have been programmed and are being implemented, aiming at increasing the effectiveness of the functioning of the organs of the system of justice and other institutions that apply the law, through

- the preparation and implementation of legislation that is as contemporary as possible;
- the creation and effective functioning of specialized structures against the forms of organized crime;
- the improvement of infrastructure, equipment and technology;
- an increase of financial sources;
- an increase of human resources, selection of employees by merit and transparently, care for the career and discipline, professional formation and treatment;
- inter-institutional coordination in the exercise of the respective duties and responsibilities;
- international cooperation in the field of criminal law.

3. In this framework, it is essential that the policies and measures against organized crime be supported in legislative initiatives that aim at including aspects both to crush and punish it, as well as preventative aspects.

This important reform has been preceded, relies on and at the same time serves the effective implementation of the legislation approved in recent years, including the amendments that were made to the Criminal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure in 2001, 2003 and 2004. In addition, important is the ratification of the European convention "On laundering, search, seizure and confiscation of the proceeds of crime," the convention against trans-national organized crime (the Palermo Convention) and two of its supplemental protocols, the European criminal convention and the civil convention "On corruption," etc.

In addition to these reforms and measures, it is contemplated also that several new laws approved in recent months will especially serve the prevention and fight against organized crime.

In February 2004, important amendments in the Code of Criminal Procedure were approved, which avoid the serious deficiencies of this legislation as to the forms, conditions, procedures, and public and private environments, as well as the breadth of the criminal offenses where our organs of the criminal proceeding, the Judicial {Police and the prosecutor's office, may apply special investigative means. Now, audio-visual surveillance in any form, the infiltration of police agents, simulations etc. are applicable for all forms of organized crime, trafficking and other serious criminal offenses.

In March 2004, the law "On the protection of witnesses and collaborators of justice" was approved, constituting an important element for filling a legislative vacuum and serving as a means that can be used effectively by the organs of the criminal proceeding in order to encourage and secure data, testimony and decisive evidence, especially in cases of organized crime, from witnesses and other individuals sentenced or under investigation, through cooperation and special protection for them in exchange for these contributions.

4. Continuing the forms undertaken up to today and the other legislative measures that accompany this draft law, the aim is the confiscation of all assets gained by the activities of criminal organizations and other structures groups of organized crime. In the way, it is aimed to strike effectively at the economic base, which constitutes the purpose of the activity and the decisive support for it in facing the state.

Through the approval and implementation of this new law, the aim is:

- to strike at the challenges that crime poses for our state and citizens;
- to strike at and prevent the phenomenon of encouraging especially the young to enter the road of crime, where the moral and example that they offer is that of quick enrichment;
- for the assets gained or stolen through crime to be taken and put under the administration of specialized structures of the state;
- for them to be put at the disposition of social and educational activities, for creating centers of education and rehabilitation of the victims of crime;
- for them to be use to strengthen the economic base and the improvement of the equipment at the disposition of state organs included in the fight against organized crime and for the compensation of work results of their employees;
- their use in the framework of international cooperation.

The draft law provides for the sequestration and confiscation of assets that result from organized crime, through an administrative procedure not essentially connected with the fate of a criminal proceeding, accompanied by criteria, procedures and structures responsible for the identification, discovery, blocking and decision making about the existence of the lack of any legal justification and a determination of the criminal origin of the assets.

Through this special legislation against criminal assets, similar with the legislation of various schools of the law, such as the Italian anti-Mafia law, the Irish law, etc., the prosecutor's office and other state organs, according to the duties and responsibilities set by law, will be able to carry out all actions for the identification, immediate sequestration and confiscation of criminal assets, presenting the respective motives.

Unlike an ordinary criminal proceeding, the new law, through administrative and civil procedures, among other things obliges the owner of assets to prove and justify the provenance of particular financial assets, as well as the fact that these assets are not connected with or controlled by persons suspected of being members of organized crime. This makes it what is known as a reversal of the burden of proof also for persons suspected of being incriminated and, in particular, included in the activities of organized crime.

Similarly, the legislation provides for the creation and functioning of a special state structure for the administration and distribution of the assets of crime, confiscated in a criminal proceeding or according to this new law. The correct administration of the assets confiscated and their distribution and use for social purposes will be the core of the activity of the Agency for the Administration of Sequestered and Confiscated Assets.

5. The draft law "On preventing and striking at organized crime" is a part of these initiatives, meeting one of the essential elements that accompany and make more effective the traditional criminal legal mechanisms and the activity of the institutions of criminal prosecution for preventing and striking at organized crime and other criminal phenomena.

The draft law aims at setting several very important normative rules for the responsible institutions, defines the duties, procedures and criteria that should be applied for the sequestration and confiscation of the assets of persons suspected as participants in organized crime and terrorism, but also in several other especially serious forms, such as trafficking, kidnapping etc.

Starting with the purpose and the character of the measures, procedures and sanctions that it contemplates, first of all, persons who are suspected as members of criminal organizations or organized groups, organizations or forms of cooperation for terrorist persons, armed bands etc. are subject to this draft law, also relying on being up to date with international conventions about especially dangerous criminal phenomena.

As the experience of our institutions shows, as well as that of countries with outstanding and successful experience against organized crime, the latter, feeling the pressure in its confrontation with the state, tries to become more sophisticated and to hide the origin and use of the assets stolen or secured through crime. For these reasons, the investigations, verifications and measures against the assets of members of organized crime take account of and are extended also to persons connected with or controlled by them. Thus, also included in these verifications and measures are the spouse, children, persons who have lived with the suspects in the last five years, and natural or juridical persons for whom there is data that the assets or activities are controlled, in whole or in part, directly or not, by the suspects

The principal organs responsible for meeting obligations according to this draft law are the prosecutor's office, the Judicial Police and the structures of the Ministry of Finance. In fulfilling their mission, these institutions operate by applying, with some exceptions of a procedural nature, the administrative legal provisions and those of a civil proceeding, having at their disposition all the legal means to verify, suspend, block, sequester and confiscate unlawful assets of persons suspected of being members of organized crime and persons related to or controlled by them.

Against this circle of persons, investigations are carried out about their financial means, assets, economic activities, manner of living, sources of income, relation with the rights, contributions, financing or credit of any kind gained from the state, international institutions etc.

In addition to other measures for the verification of the case and the preparation of requests for confiscation directed to the court, in the case of real dangers of the loss, misappropriation or alienation of the funds and assets, the court may order preliminary sequestration against them, on the request of the prosecutor.

Another important element of the draft law is the equality of the parties before the court in the obligation to present evidence and legal justifications connected with the respective claims.

Under such conditions, in addition to the ordinary responsibility of the state institutions the court has the right to compel even persons who have the title of an owner, or who have any kind of title, funds or assets of any kind, of a value that does not comport with their income or economic abilities, to justify the lawfulness of the provenance of these assets. At the same time, the court may also order the temporary suspension of the administration and disposition of the activities and assets that are used, directly or not, for the performance of these economic activities.

The expenses for the measures taken according to this draft law in every case are paid by the state preliminarily, while their administration is entrusted to an administrator of sequestered property, who is appointed to this role by the court from among the employees of or persons certified by a new institution that is created, the Agency for the Administration of Sequestered and Confiscated Assets. The amount of confiscation is set by request of the prosecutor, who submits to the court the reasons on which he bases his request.

New very important elements of the draft law are the criteria, procedures and responsibilities of the institutions that deal with the treatment, administration and use of the sequestered and confiscated assets. It is thought that the principal responsible decision-making authority on these questions, according to the provisions of the draft law, will be the minister of Finance, who is supported by the technical analyses and the preparatory work done by the Agency for the Administration of Sequestered and Confiscated Assets.

The draft law contemplates that the confiscated funds and assets be used for the indemnification of the victims of organized crime or be given in administration to the organs of the system of justice, public order, civil defense, and the units of local government for purposes of fulfilling their functions or for social purposes. The central institution or unit of local government may administer immovable property directly or give it in use, without compensation, to non-profit organizations or other public entities that have the social, cultural and health rehabilitation of the strata of society in need as the object of their activity.

The Agency for the Administration of Sequestered and Confiscated Assets is contemplated to play a special role in the treatment, administration and distribution of the confiscated unlawful assets. The organization, composition and procedures for its functioning and realizing its obligations according to this draft law are contemplated to be defined in detail in substatutory acts of the Council of Ministers, relying on the already programmed assistance and experience from international institutions.

In order to come to the assistance of the structures charged with duties according to this draft law, for purposes of coordination and orienting them in important decision-making or in the development of policies for this field and the measures against organized crime, in general, the Consultative Committee for Measures against Organized Crime is contemplated to play an important role. It will be directed by the Prime Minister and will have in its composition the heads of the institutions responsible for preventing and striking at organized crime in the organs of the executive and judicial power, as well as the representatives of the units of local government.

In order that effective, preventative and educational steps and initiatives be better served, a part of the income secured from the administration of sequestered assets is contemplated to be set aside for the creation of a special fund for the prevention of criminality and for legal education.
